Cardiac Care Center-Khambhat

Maneklal Mohanlal Parikh Cardiac Care center is located in Khambhat, Gujarat, India and was originally built in 1943 by Mr. B.K. Patel, Mr. Chunilal Girdharlal and Mr. Mulchandbhai Zaveri, all of whom were from Khambhat. At that time, the only services provided were labor and delivery. Today, there are many high tech facilities in the hospital. Three physicians from America come to serve the local population on regular basis here. The patients get treated at low cost or no cost, when they are not able to afford the treatments. In fact, several donors have adopted 150 diabetic patients, who receive their medical care, medications and other supplies free of charge.

In most hospitals in India, if a patient develops a heart attack, there are at least two formalities to observe before the treatment even begins. First, he has to deposit at least Rs 20,000 which will enable him to purchase the necessary medications. The second issue has to do with Mediclaim (the health insurance in India) – if he has it, he's OK but if he doesn't, then he'll have to deposit another Rs 50,000 to continue his treatment. This kind of scenario plays out at many renowned hospitals in many Indian cities but not in M.M. Parikh Cardiac Care Center.

One of the secretary of the hospital, does not share this ideology. "Our motto is treatment of the patient first and then everything else comes later. The ability to pay does not determine how a patient will be treated. If the hospital were to ask for money up front, it would put additional stress on the family of the patient. Therefore, we at the Khambhat hospital provide the necessary treatments to the patient, even if he or his family is unable to pay at the time of admission." The hospital has a cardiac care center, a dialysis center, and a digital imaging center. There is also a well-equipped laboratory that is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. People from 90 surrounding villages and towns come to the hospital for treatment, in addition to the patients who live in Khambhat.
